

ABSTRACT

A method for determining specific dosage levels for individual animals, in which the mass of an animal is determined, and where the dosage is determined in relation to the mass of the animal. The dosage information is used to determine the amount of medicinal substance that is to be pumped directly to an injector means or a spray means, where it can be applied or injected into the animal.